Emergency volunteers honored

As part of the annual awards ceremony for the West Sacramento police and fire departments this month, the WSFD honored a group of citizen volunteers who have trained as 'CERTs.'

These "Community Emergency Response Team" volunteers are trained to help their families and community in the event of a community, and to support police and fire services.

Eight of West Sacramento's CERTs were recognized at the ceremony for achieving "bronze" status -- donating at least 100 hours of community service.

Another, Randy Frank,earned a "gold" award for exceeding 500 volunteer hours.

The fire department's CERT program is about to begin another round of recruitment and training. See the back page of this News-Ledger for information.

GUEST COMMENTARY:

Butterflies: time for a change

By Mary K. Hanson

Only a pipevine will do for the eggs of the pipeline swallotwail butterfly, a native of local riparian areas (Photo by Mary K. Hanson)

It's usually in March and April when these butterflies first emerge from their chrysalises and set out to feed on nectar and find suitable mates. I look for them along the riverbanks and streams I visit in the spring, knowing I'll find them on the plant for which they're named. I love their velvety black wings with their bright blue iridescence that winks in the sunlight as the butterflies do their early morning warm-up flights.

They really are one of the most recognizable butterflies in the region. When viewed from the top they are predominantly black with an iridescent blue sheen on their hind wings (which is brighter on the males than it is on the females) and white spots along the wing margins. The underside of their wings boasts some bright orange spots surrounded by black and iridescent blue. Can you name my favorite butterfly?

It is the Pipevine Swallowtail (Battus philenor)!

The Pipevine Swallowtail's body is fuzzy black with white spots. Its long curling proboscis is used to feed on nectar from a variety of flowers and thistles, but the butterfly gets its name from the host plant on which it lays its tiny reddish-brown eggs: the California Pipevine, also known as the California Dutchman's Pipe (Aristolochia californica). The flowers, which look like fat pitchers or calabash pipes, arrive just before the vines start sprouting their broad vaguely heart-shaped leaves. Although the flowers look like those of some insectivorous (insect-eating) plants, the Pipevine isn't an insect-eater. Later in the season, when the flowers drop off, they are replaced by six-winged ribbed seed pods.

These vines can be found growing naturally in riparian zones (moist areas where forests meet streams and rivers) throughout the northern and central parts of the state, including the Sacramento Valley, Yolo County and Napa County. Although they are not considered endangered, there are some areas where the vines have been exterminated as weeds or nuisance plants by those who do not recognize them or understand their importance to the local ecology. And that is very bad news for the Pipevine Swallowtails. The female butterflies will only lay their eggs on the vines; and when the caterpillars emerge, they feed exclusively on the Pipevine. No other plant will do. So, where the Pipevines are destroyed, so are the Pipevine Swallowtails.

The caterpillars forage in groups when they're young and then become more solitary as they age. They go through stages called "instars" during which the caterpillar sheds its old skin, sort of like a snake, and emerges larger and darker. The caterpillars, like the adult butterflies, are very recognizable. They usually appear locally in April and May (but may be seen as late as September) gorging

21 years for West Sac man in domestic assault

Yolo County District Attorney Jeff Reisig announced that on March 7, Superior Court Judge Paul Richardson sentenced Michael Robert Hernandez III, 33, of West Sacramento, to 21 years in state prison for attacking his girlfriend.

Hernandez pled no contest on January 24 to two strike-felonies, and multiple enhancements, including assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury, infliction of great bodily injury during domestic violence, and dissuading a witness.

According to the District Attorney's office:

On October 11, 2012, West Sacramento Police Officers were dispatched to a residence on Circle Drive, for a report of a fight between Hernandez and the victim. She and Hernandez were in a verbal argument that became physical when Hernandez pushed the victim to the floor and strangled her, causing her to nearly lose consciousness before he released his grip Hernandez then punched and kicked the victim multiple times. While the victim was lying on the floor Hernandez straddled the victim and strangled her again, this time to the point of unconsciousness.

When the victim regained consciousness, Hernandez was going through her cell phone and threatened to hit her with a bicycle lock to prevent her from using her phone. The victim was ultimately able to use another phone to call a nearby family member for help. When West Sacramento Police Officers arrived, Hernandez had already left the home.

The next day, Hernandez contacted the victim over the phone and asked if she was going to testify against him. When she answered that she would, he said that he was driving around looking for her with a firearm in his lap, and threatened to shoot her in the head.

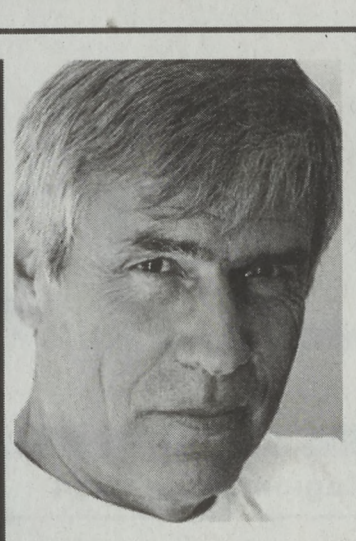
'Healing Wall' holds names and a message

My Back Pages



By Daryl Fisher

I put together a little section in the News-Ledger most weeks entitled "Across the Bridge" which is meant to give some publicity to events happening around the greater Sacramento area that some of our readers might want to attend. One such calendar announcement came across my desk this past week about the traveling three-quarter-scale replica of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, D.C. It will be on display this spring from May 23-27 at Mount Vernon Memorial Park in Fair Oaks and anyone who has never seen it before should definitely put it down on their list of things to do.

About 15-years ago my wife and I took our youngest son, Kyle, to see it when it was on display in Sacramento's Capitol Park. It was actually just one of five traveling "Healing Walls" which were criss-crossing the country at that time, and it was making its first appearance in Sacramento. It was modeled after Maya Lin's much-respected Washington D.C. Vietnam Veterans Memorial which commemorates the more than 58,000 American men and women who lost their lives in the Vietnam War.

The Wall That Heals, as it is called, is a smaller version of Ms. Lin's creation which was erected with the following four design criteria: it had to be reflective and contemplative in character; harmonize with its surroundings; contain all the names of those who died in the Vietnam War; and make no political statement.

The scaled-down portable replicas are in constant demand throughout the country since not everyone can go all the way back to Washington D.C. to see the original. So the traveling replicas have become one of the best ways for many Americans to pay their respects to those who died in what was then this country's longest military engagement. The traveling Walls have also proved helpful in educating people (especially young people) throughout the nation about the Vietnam War and its ongoing societal consequences.

When we arrived in Capitol Park, a number of politicians and military personnel were making speeches that I didn't particularly want to hear, so my wife and I took our son over to the California Vietnam Veteran's Memorial, which was nearby. I showed him the large map of Vietnam which is engraved into one of the walkways and he was impressed by the fact that he could stand right on top of a whole country. I pointed out some of the places where I had spent time while I was in Vietnam, but he didn't seem too impressed. He was more interested in the life-size bronze statues depicting American soldiers firing their M16's and throwing hand grenades.

As we made our way back over to the scaled-down Vietnam Veterans Memorial, my nine-year-old son seemed to quickly sense that it wasn't a place where he should be running around and making a lot of noise. He looked at all the adults who were standing quietly in front of the shiny black panels with serious expressions on their faces and asked me, almost in a whisper, "Is your name on one of those things?"

"No," I said, "but some people I knew are."

"If your dad's name was up there," explained my wife, "you wouldn't even be here. Those are the names of all the people who died in the Vietnam War."

My son nodded, thought it all over for a few moments, and then asked a question only a nine-year-old can. "Dad, do they have a wall thing for everyone who didn't die, too?"

"No," I answered, "just for those who didn't get to come home."

"I'm glad you got to come home, Dad."

"So, I am, son."

A little later, a very nice and thoughtful volunteer working for the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Fund (a non-profit organization which helps protect, preserve, and maintain the panels) explained to me how the `Healing Walls' are set up. Names are inscribed in chronological order, including the numerous new names which have been added to the Wall since 1982. She assisted me in locating the names I had come to see, and I waited patiently for a place in front of panel 19-West to open up. On line 3 was Michael Lawhon, and just below him, on line 6, was James Woods. As I thought back on how kind and gentle Mike was, and how big and indestructible

My nine-year-old son seemed to quickly sense that it wasn't a place where he should be running around and making a lot of noise. He looked at all the adults who were standing quietly in front of the shiny black panels with serious expressions on their faces and asked me, almost in a whisper, "Is your name on one of those things?"

Woody had seemed, my wife motioned for me to join her in reading a few of the notes and cards which had been left behind by earlier visitors.

One read: Dear Dad - I never really got to know you, but I still miss you. I hope things are peaceful for you now. Your daughter.

Part of another said: You were a wonderful son. Rest well.

On the back of a Valentine's Day card were the words: To Ed, my first real love. I still miss you terribly. Lovingly, Judy.

The next day I returned to Capitol Park with my father, who had spent four long years in the Pacific Theater during WWII, and my brother and his three sons. As we were walking through the California Vietnam Veterans Memorial on our way to see the scaled-down version of the `Healing Wall', my brother pointed out the engraved short quote which I have long felt best memorializes all those who served in Vietnam and all the wars that seemingly every new generation of Americans have to go fight and die in: "All gave some, some gave all." I also thought of another short quote that I wish all the countries of the world and their politicians could somehow come to better understand: "War is mankind's greatest shame."

Yolo County residents are enjoying free eBooks and other digital media from the Yolo County Library now more than ever. Thanks to increased efforts to get the word out about the library's digital media collection, found on www.yolocountylibrary.org, including several workshops held following the holidays when sales of tablet devices reached record highs, usage of the collection has nearly doubled since 2011. In just the six month period between July and December, 2012, Yolo County residents downloaded 14,233 e-materials across all device platforms such as iPads, other iOS and Android devices, and Nooks and Kindles.

In the coming weeks, the library's digital media collection, powered by OverDrive, will have a new look and enhanced features with OverDrive's Next Generation website. The upgrade will include the new OverDrive Read™ technology, as well as a new responsive design that optimizes the website for mobile and desktop use. Regardless of the device used, the experience will be the same. NOTICE OF PROTEST HEARING
LOCAL AGENCY FORMATION COMMISSION OF YOLO COUNTY

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that on Thursday April 25, 2013 at 9:00 am, or as soon thereafter as the matter may be heard, the Local Agency Formation Commission of Yolo County (LAFCo) will hold a Protest Hearing at the City of West Sacramento Civic Center, Council Chambers, 1110 West Capitol Avenue, West Sacramento, CA to consider the following agenda item:

Project Title:
Davis Cemetery District Annexation (LAFCo No. 915)

Project Description:
The annexation proposal was initiated by District Resolution on January 7, 2013. LAFCo approved the annexation proposal on March 28, 2013 as shown in LAFCo Resolution 2013-02 which is available for review at the LAFCo office or online at www.yololafco.org. The Attachment to the Resolution includes detailed maps of the annexation area. The annexation area expands the Davis Cemetery District's existing boundaries by 126,130 acres, annexing all the lands in its Sphere of Influence planning boundary north to County Road 27 and east to the Sacramento River including all of the land in the county south and east of that line including West Sacramento, Clarksburg and surrounding rural areas.

The existing cemetery in Davis has sufficient capacity to accommodate the new area and no new cemetery sites are proposed. The annexation allows residents in the subject area to have a public cemetery option for burial services. The annexation will not increase property taxes. The District is not seeking any property tax revenue for this subject territory and Cemetery burial costs will be handled by the District instituting a two-tiered fee system correlating to the tax rate areas zone of benefit.

Written Protest;
Written protests against this annexation may be filed by owners of land within the affected area or by registered voters in the affected area. Written protests may either be mailed to Yolo LAFCo, 625 Court Street, Suite 203, Woodland CA 95695, or delivered to the LAFCo Executive Officer at the Protest Hearing on April 25th. Each written protest must be filed no later than the conclusion of the hearing to be considered valid. Protest Forms are available on the LAFCo website at www.yololafco.org under Forms & Policies. The effect of protests received will be determined within 30 days following the hearing in accordance with Government Code Section 57075.

ing on the leaves, stems and pods of the Pipevine plants. When newly hatched, the caterpillars are reddish-brown. As they grow in girth and length, they then darken to a deep rich black with bright red-orange spines down their backs. This black-and-red coloring mimics many species that are toxic or unpalatable to predators and this helps protects the Pipevine Swallowtails. The vines and pods that the caterpillars eat contain a substance called aristolochic acid which is passed on to the caterpillars and is also carried in the bodies of the adult butterflies. As additionally frightening deterrent, when aggravated the Pipevine Swallowtail caterpillar rears up and disgorges bright orange "horns" from the top of its head which are slimed in toxic goo.

In May or June, the fully grown caterpillars start to hang themselves from the side of trees, fence posts, twigs or branches from silken threads they weave called "suspension loops", and then form a chrysalis around their torpid bodies. The chrysalises are usually brown, but can also be golden-brown or green when they're first made. When you find them, look closely at these tiny delicate works of art. They have points and whorls, and an almost stained-glass-window quality to their architecture. These special cases protect the metamorphosing caterpillars through the end year and into the next spring, when they will emerge again as butterflies.

Resist the urge to touch them. To ensure that this intricate, complex, and beautiful cycle of life continues, it is essential to leave the eggs, caterpillars and their chrysalises wherever you find them. Taking photographs is the best way to "take them home with you". There is a saying: "When you teach a child not to kill a caterpillar, you do as much good for the child as you do for the caterpillar." (Okay I made that up, but you get the point.) It's also essential that the habitat where the native Pipevines grow is protected – and that's where you can make the greatest impact on behalf of these butterflies. Remember that riparian zones are actually vital ecosystems that contain and support many tiny miracles – like the Pipevine Swallowtails – which need and deserve your respect and protection. You can help safeguard the riparian zones in and around your community by supporting the efforts of your local conservation and environmental organizations. Volunteer. Donate your time and dollars when you can. Together we get things done.

The roll-out of OverDrive Read™, a browser-based technology enabling instant access to eBooks both online or offline with no software or downloading required, will undoubtedly add to increased usage. The new "see book, read book" format is expected to reduce technological barriers to using the digital media collection. If the title is available to borrow, users may download it as in the past, or they can choose to start reading right away in their web browser. Browser-based reading will sync the book's progression across devices.

The Yolo County Library's digital media collection is already searchable in the library's catalog and monthly new title lists are available. For those new to using the digital media collection, the Mary L. Stephens Davis Branch Library offers one-on-one appointments on how to download from the collection. Lassen: a chance for kids to camp, helped by nonprofit

The Lassen Park Foundation (LPF) is inviting groups that help children in need to apply for Youth Camping Grants by May 1.

"Last year, we awarded 26 grants to groups of challenged youth from Northern California and Southern Oregon," said LPF Chairman John Koeberer. "Each grant provides up to $1,000 to take kids camping in Lassen Volcanic National Park. Often, this is the first camping experience and the first visit to a national park for these children."

"Kids helped by these grants are at risk. They're often homeless, from broken homes, or in situations where their families just can't afford to take them camping," said Koeberer, "The grants paid for camping supplies, transportation and food for nearly 500 kids and their chaperones."

To qualify for a grant, group leaders must establish that their kids need financial assistance. They must also organize the camping trip, provide adult supervision and insurance. An LPF Youth Camping Grant can be obtained by calling 530-378-2600, emailing kristen@lassenparkfoundation.org or visiting www.lassenparkfoundation.org.
